A free-lance journalist, charging that the Central Intelligence Agency has violated key provisions of the Freedom of Information Act, filed suit in Washington to force the CIA to give him documents he requested three years ago concerning the agency's alleged infiltration of the underground press during the 1960s. Angus Mackenzie of San Francisco, who first requested the information in 1979, said he believes classified documents prove there was a secret government campaign to crush the antiwar and counter-cultural press that sprang up during the Vietnam War. A CIA spokesman denied that the agency had ever been "involved in destroying underground newspapers."
